FRENCH ADVANCE IN ATTEMPT TO AID STRASBOURG

Believed Supported by The American Units; Make Headway

BRITISH ADVANCING

Germans Continue To Retreat From Deflated Ardennes Salient

By International News Service

PARIS, Jan. 25.—(INS)—Counter-attacks by French First Army troops, believed supported by American units, to relieve the German threat to the French Rhine-land city of Strasbourg gained further headway today, with headquarters reporting advances of one to three miles north of Colmar.

Appreciable progress was made also by the British Second Army at the northern end of the western front in a drive toward the Roer River defense line in the Reich.

The Germans continued to retreat back out of the deflated Ardennes salient, with units of the American First and Third Armies in close pursuit giving constant battle to Nazi covering rearguard units.

South of Colmar limited gains were scored by the French in the Mulhouse-Cernay area against stiff German resistance which slowed the pace of the French assault in that sector.

Troops of the British Second Army driving to points 10 miles inside the Reich and within 17 miles of the industrial city of Munchen-Gladbach, reached Weerd, three and one-half miles southwest of Roermond.

In continued advances they captured...

Eight-Alarm Fire Rages in Mid-Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 25.—(INS)—An eight-alarm fire, fanned by stiff winds, today raged uncontrolled through a half-block of buildings in mid-Philadelphia.

The flames broke out in the rear of the Henry Schmidt Paper Box factory, a scant three blocks from the waterfront, and broke through the walls within a few minutes after it was discovered. Despite the efforts of firemen—summoned from almost every station in the city—the fire ate through five adjoining buildings and leaped across a small street to St. George's Church.

Tons of water—poured on the buildings from every vantage point—turned to ice almost immediately, as the temperature dropped to the lowest point of the season in the Quaker City.

No injuries were reported, although the ice-glazed streets multiplied the hazards for firemen. Traffic in the center of the city was brought to a virtual standstill.

Sparks, lashed by the biting wind, showered the nearby Delaware river bridge and buildings in a four-block square area. A huge charred and twisted electric sign, poised over the street, threatened to crash to the sidewalk momentarily.

REPORT BERLIN CHOKED WITH REFUGEES

London—Unconfirmed reports reached London today that refugee-choked Berlin had been ordered evacuated to relieve congestion resulting from mass migration of German civilians back to the heart of the Reich from stolen Polish territory and war-threatened areas of eastern Germany.

Stockholm also reported unsubstantiated reports that preparations were being made to evacuate Berlin. The Danish press service said that foreign correspondents working in the Nazi capital had been warned they must be prepared to leave at a moment's notice.

The account reaching Sweden said government and civil administrations are being removed from Berlin. Records and valuables were reported being moved in furniture trucks.

While Nazi propagandists emitted further plaints concerning the grim plight of Hitler's military machine on the eastern front, a new rumor concerning a possible German peace bid cropped up with an Ankara report to the effect that Nazi diplomat Franz von Papen had arrived in Madrid to sound out the possibilities of peace terms for Germany.

765 American Troops Killed and Missing As Ship Sinks

Washington—Secretary of War Stimson disclosed today that an American troopship carrying 2200 American soldiers was sunk recently in European waters due to enemy action with 248 men killed and 517 missing.

Stimson said that the remainder, numbering "over 1400" were saved. He gave out no further details excepting to say that developments have now made it possible to make the announcement.

The loss is the first sizeable one of a troop transport to be sunk in the European area.

Sgt. Benner served as a postal clerk in Algiers and Italy and came through several bombing raids unscathed.

"On one occasion in Algiers I was really frightened," she said. "The enemy kept coming over and strafing the building where I was quartered. Everyone felt so helpless."

STOCKHAM EXPLAINS SCHOOL FUND PLANS

Preliminary Report is Now Before the General Assembly

TO COST $10,294,000

HARRISBURG, Jan. 25.—(INS)—The State School Commission's preliminary report was before the General Assembly today proposing an equitable system of distributing Commonwealth funds to school districts for education, pupil transportation, high school tuition and health services.

Rep. Thomas E. Stockham (R) Bucks, a Commission member, said three other reports would follow and legislation carrying out the agency's recommendations would be introduced.

The report emphasized that if funds were distributed equitably, the education costs of the Commonwealth would be boosted approximately $10,294,000 a year.

Stockham said the Commission proposed a standard five mill tax on local real estate to guarantee minimum education standards.

The Commission recommended fixing a $1700 cost base for each bloc of 28 pupils with the Commonwealth contributing the difference between the funds raised by the five mill tax and the proposed minimum. In no case, it was emphasized, would the State's contribution for each unit be less than $600.

The forthcoming legislation faced an uncertain future in the Assembly because the increased costs to the Commonwealth probably would mean new taxes as Gov. Edward

LEGISLATURE WILL SET THE DATE FOR PRIMARY ELECTION AT JUNE 19

HARRISBURG, Jan. 25.—Republican and Democratic legislative leaders have agreed to fix this year's primary election date at June 19, instead of Sept. 11, in a move to facilitate soldier voting.

The 313th has turned mule paths and trails into "main supply routes" in supporting the 88th's infantrymen in their drive through the Gustav and Hitler Lines, the liberation of Rome and into the formidable Gothic Line.

In February and March, the 313th received its battle indoctrination at Cassino and in the Garigliano area. Road maintenance, mine removal and building of three Bailey bridges and a foot bridge kept the engineers busy until the Fifth

THIS IS IT!

Last Fall, when Tom Dewey said in a radio address that President Roosevelt had put this nation on the auction block and that the Communists were the highest bidders, many Americans were profoundly shocked.

The outcome of the election showed that too few Americans understood the fundamental truth of the Republican candidate's accusation.

The Hillman-Browder activities, through the Political Action Committees, were widely regarded as no more than a new, novel and mildly exciting development in the so-called "labor movement."

America needs no longer to be in doubt.

This is the pay-off.

Why mince words about it? Congress now has been presented with the two halves of the most blatant, Communist-minded dictatorship it would be possible to design.

First is the universal draft demanded by the President.

Every man and woman in America would thereafter be regimented. Jobs and wages would be in the hands of Communist-influenced bureaucrats. Through the use of rationing and the Selective Service as punitive devices, resistance would be crushed.

Many Americans wondered why, at the present stage of the war, and with so many conspicuous wastes of manpower visible on ever hand, the Administration suddenly demanded enactment of such drastic measures.

The Wallace nomination let the cat out of the bag. Just as all personal independence in this nation was to be crushed through universal service, so all industry and commerce are to be taken over through the National Department of Commerce and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

You will say at first that this is an extreme statement—the appointment involves no change in the fundamental laws.

This is true.

It is the same vehicle—but with a new driver.

For several years Jesse Jones has had incredibly vast powers in his hands.

But Jesse Jones is a believer in the American system; he is a business man; he wishes no "revolution."

Wallace on the contrary is a hare-brained visionary, stubborn without being strong, led by the nose by the most radical and anti-American elements in the United States. Moreover, changes in the law, while not yet presented, are definitely planned.

Roosevelt in his Budget Message and Byrnes in his recent report on War Mobilization and Reconversion both called for vast increases in the borrowing and lending capacity of Federal agencies.

Moreover, both indicated plans for a substantially new type of government lending—loans to what they described as "small business."

These new and extended lending programs would come largely within the sphere of Wallace's new job.

The effect of the national debt is to mortgage all the

Explains Method Used In Making Ceramic Items

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 25.—Using clay, modeling tools and other accessories to demonstrate her talk, Mrs. Helen Jung, New Galena, explained the manufacture of ceramic jewelry to members of the Soroptimist Club of Bucks County at the monthly social dinner meeting of the club on Monday evening.

Mrs. Jung modeled a brooch in the design of a dogwood blossom and then told her audience about the process of drying, glazing, decorating and firing the clay base. She stated that she used an electric furnace for the firing of the clay.

The speaker told about acquiring her knowledge of the craft after her husband had witnessed a demonstration and suggesting to her that she might find it interesting. Some artistic ability is essential, she said, in designing the articles, but the actual manufacture is easy to acquire. She told of being able to find the clay in most parts of the county and explained the washing of the raw material before it was ready to use.

Appointment was made of a committee to represent the club at the meeting of the various organizations for consideration of a youth center. Members appointed on the committee are Mrs. Chester V. Kraft, Mrs. Ralph E. Farquhar, Jr., and Miss Emma Larzelere.

IT WASN'T A DREAM

Now that the Heimies are again on the run on the Western Front—as well as elsewhere—there is a disposition to minimize the potentialities of the Von Rundstedt offensive, which, a month ago, many feared would take all before it. Some persons now regard it as having been just a flash in the pan that never was a threat to Allied progress.

It should be remembered, though, that most military observers were certain last month that this offensive had as its purpose the winning of time so that Hitler could raise 100 new divisions for use in the spring. Because the Germans are again being pushed back does not prove that he has not gained the time needed, if that was his object.

The picture of the German offensive, as viewed from this point, resembles the following:

The Nazi armies were within 500 yards of millions of gallons of American gasoline. Only two and one-half miles away was the sprawling American 1st Army headquarters, with vast supply dumps. Had the Germans gone those 500 yards, they could have crashed on and perhaps driven through to Paris and Antwerp. What stopped them? They ran out of gasoline—500 yards from millions of gallons of it.

Von Rundstedt tried exactly the same thing that worked for the Nazis in 1940. Then, they drove through the Allied lines, split the French and British forces, and then came Dunkerque.

Simplest and most direct analysis of the whole episode has come from Brig. Gen. Leonard P. Ayres, one of the most astute American observers of the world scene. Calling the German attack a successful surprise, he said there seem to be two principal reasons why such a surprise was possible.

"The first," he said, "is that our high command misinterpreted the information which they had that the Germans were concentrating divisions behind their lines opposite the Ardennes Forest through which our front lines ran. The concentration was assumed to be a defensive grouping, which it was not. The second reason why a surprise was possible was that our generals apparently far underestimated the military skill and resourcefulness of their adversaries."

General MacArthur's activities in the Philippines are an act of desperation, says General Homma, who forgot to add that the Japs are on the desperate side.

If the farmer is expected to produce still more food with still less help, any hankering he may have had to join the CIO is out.

PROTECT BABY'S SKIN FROM INTENSE COLD OF THE WINTER

By Mary Jacoby Fleetman
(Home Economics Representative)

Baby needs special beauty care when winter colds blow. Jack Frost seems to take joy in nipping at his fingers and cheeks and round button nose. But it's easy to protect his sensitive skin from chapping if, before you take him out of doors, you rub his hands and cheeks with a special baby lotion that's made of pure lanolin with an antiseptic agent for added extra protection. Make it routine to give toddlers and kindergartners as well as baby all-over rub-downs with this new baby lotion after baths to keep skin satin smooth in spite of steam heat and cold weather. And use baby lotion after diaper changes, too, to help His Majesty avoid uncomfortable chafes.

resources of the American people. The size of the debt will automatically freeze all forms of credit in this nation the moment the national government wishes.

One form or another of credit is indispensable for all forms of business in a free economy.

If the Federal government, as is now apparent is the intention, sets up a monopoly of credit under Henry Wallace, then Wallace becomes the czar of all forms of American business.

Saying that this is being contemplated in the names of "democracy" and "free enterprise" doesn't alter facts.

The program is the antithesis of democracy, the denial of free enterprise.

The fact that the Spanish inquisition was set up in the name of Christianity did not make it one bit less bloodthirsty, tyrannical and subversive of human rights and freedoms.

The measures now being urged in the halls of Congress with all the eloquence and political pressure and prestige of the White House behind them, under whatever innocent title they may be known, still are flagrant, outrageous and Communist-designed dictatorship.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Unqualified

Washington, Jan. 25.

UNDER ANY circumstances the departure of Mr. Jesse Jones from his post as Secretary of Commerce, which carries with it control of the RFC and various allied financial agencies, would be a cause for regret by those who admire competency and character in high public office.

came President. Yet, it is now planned to oust one of the most capable business men in the country and put Mr. Wallace at the head of the department which deals exclusively with business and controls an almost incredible number of billions.

OPPOSITION to his confirmation in the Senate is based, partly, on his total unfitness for such huge financial responsibilities; partly, on the undisputed use of this important post as a political reward; partly, on Mr. Wallace's own radical views as expressed in his writings and speeches. But, mainly, the appointment is opposed because of the belief that with him as Secretary of Commerce, the CIO will be definitely in the governmental saddle with its professional lobbyists as the closest advisers to the man controlling the multibillions of the RFC and allied agencies. There is a feeling that the Wallace appointment will present an opportunity for the CIO to dominate and operate the business of the country in a way heretofore undreamed of, and that, despite his friendly words about "private enterprise," Mr. Wallace's whole heart would be set in this direction.

SOME SENATORS believe that his appointment threatens the whole economic security of the country and regard the effort to give him this significant power fully as dangerous as the effort to pack the Supreme Court. Not the least distressing feature of this whole business is the disclosure that in his fourth term Mr. Roosevelt still thinks it necessary to play politics and placate politicians at the expense of the national interest. It is particularly amazing that he should do so right after his Friday speech in which he spoke of the "gravity of the hour" and indicated his desire to put aside partisan politics so that a united people might "get on with the war."

CHAPTER TWENTY

Maud was there, too, little and indomitable in sweeping black with her pompadour rising high above her narrow, fallow forehead, her collar of boned white net lifting her little dark chin in the air, and her eyes brooding and angry, watching the police, watching Nicky and Alexia, watching even me, fixedly. I don't think a move or a look or a quickened pulse escaped her eager, antlike eyes. Dr. Claud Chivery wasn't there.

Then I saw Drue sitting in a tall armchair, her hands around the arm of it, her white cap like a crown upon her shining hair. She was pale; her dark gray eyes had a kind of terrified stillness. I thought she tried to communicate with me, mutely, with her look, and I tried, mutely, to remind her of danger, and in the same fractional glance that I was on her side.

Then I felt that somebody was watching us and turned. It was Lieutenant Nugent, his eyes narrow and thoughtful, more green than gray—which was, as a matter of fact, what he was. He said, "Sit down, please, Nurse Keate. The District Attorney, Mr. Soper, wants to question you."

I sat down, and the long questioning began for me. It began badly and ended badly.

The first thing Soper said was a flat, bald statement to the effect that they had found enough digitals in Conrad Brent's blood stream to kill him, and they believed it was murder. From there they went on to that inevitable conclusion.

I told them exactly what I had already told Lieutenant Nugent, no more, no less. They questioned Maud and Nicky and Alexia; they sent for and questioned Peter Huber; they questioned everybody. Gradually the story built itself up—much of it by confirmation, for it was obvious that they had already done considerable, less public, questioning.

Conrad Brent had spent the previous day about as other days were spent, except for his anxiety about Drue, two or three morning visits to Craig's room and a talk with Dr. Chivery. This (according to Maud) was entirely about Craig's condition. The Lieutenant already knew that Conrad had had an interview in his study with me and then with Drue. He asked me, I was questioned again about that almost immediately. It was about his son, I told them firmly, and that was all.

There was a speculative look in Nicky's eyes as he turned to look at me, and Maud said abruptly, "That isn't all, Lieutenant. Don't forget that Conrad was furious because Drue Cable came here, and told her she had to leave. She was to go this morning. She—"

"Yes, you told me that," cut in Nugent. Drue's lips parted a little, and she leaned forward as if to speak, but Nugent did not permit her to do so. "Now, then," he said briskly, "there were no callers yesterday except Dr. Chivery and myself. What about dinner?"

I couldn't tell whether or not they had yet questioned Drue. It seemed logical that they had, but somehow I thought they had not. I listened anxiously.

Dinner had been at the usual hour. Nicky, Peter, Alexia, and Maud, and of course Conrad had dined together. Drue was there, too, said Maud, but the other nurse (her eager black eyes went to me) was on duty so a tray was sent up to her. But nothing happened at dinner; no one talked much; all of them ate the same food. So he couldn't have been poisoned then. The evening had been passed much as usual. They had played bridge, Conrad, Maud, Alexia and Peter—Nicky had read and watched. During the game there had been the usual talk of current news, the war, affairs at home; sometime during the game (no one remembered the time) Conrad had sent Alexia to get the clipping; the box of medicine had been in the desk drawer then.

At about eleven they had stopped playing. Conrad had gone for his walk, the others had gone to bed. Dr. Chivery had stopped shortly after eleven (Maud told this; too, she was altogether more eagerly informative than anyone else; he had gone to the room a little before occupied when she stayed as she so often did at the Brent house, but he had not remained for long. He had walked to the Chivery cottage. "There's a path, a short-cut," said Maud, and Nugent nodded.

"He told us he didn't see Brent?" said Soper to Nugent who nodded again. So I knew they had already questioned Dr. Chivery.

Usually Conrad returned from his walk in about forty-five minutes; he walked very slowly, so probably he had not taken a really long walk. His coat, stick and hat were in their usual place in the closet off the hall. His dinner-jacket hung there, too, and he had put on a lounge coat and, apparently, gone directly to bed before going upstairs," said Eevers. "He had a nightcap or smoked a cigarette or two as a rule and then went to bed. He never wanted me to wait for him; he locked the front door himself."

Nightcap. Brady? Well, they had taken away the decanter; they would know if there was poison in it.

Nicky then created a small sensation by saying abruptly that he had seen Conrad return. "I was here in this room," I saw Conrad come in, lock the door, remove his coat and hat and put on his lounge coat."

"Nicky!" cried Alexia twisting around to look up at him.

District Attorney Soper asked, "But look here, Mr. Soper, why didn't you tell us?"

"I didn't think it was important," replied Nicky. "That's all there is to it, you see, he didn't see me. I was sitting over there by the fire, reading. He went into the library and after a while I went upstairs. That's all."

Drue was looking at him steadily.

"Are you sure that's all?" pressed Nugent. "Did anyone—you, for instance, go into the library?" There was a silence.

Nicky smiled and examined the fingernails on one slender hand. "That's all," he said with a kind of silky stubbornness.

Nugent looked thoughtfully at Nicky. Soper did the questioning, his eyes suspicious, except when they rested upon Alexia, of whom he obviously approved and who did look, I must say, very lovely and helpless. Nicky leaned against the back of her chair in an ostentatiously protecting way, still with the shadow of a smile on his lips, and Alexia sat perfectly still for the most part, answering only when she had to and that briefly, one leg crossed over the other and the toe of her pump making impatient little circles.

After a while they sent for Peter Huber who came into the room and sat down not far from me. He had told Craig, I imagined, as much as could be told. He sighed a little, unconsciously, as he sat down, lighted a cigarette, and listened. As we all listened.

Presently they questioned him—or rather recapitulated some earlier questioning. When he came downstairs he had found both nurses in the library, was that right? Yes, that was right; he nodded. Why had he come downstairs at all?

"I told you that, I'd dropped off to sleep, reading. I hadn't put up the window or turned off the light and, when I awoke, the room was too warm. I put up the windows and turned off the light and then I opened the door to the hall, thinking I'd get air into the room more quickly that way."

As he did it he heard a kind of scream from somewhere downstairs. He'd listened for a moment and, as he was using the door again, I had run along the corridor and down the stairs. So he thought something was wrong, went back to get a dressing gown and slippers, and had come down after me.

"Mr. Huber," urged the District Attorney, "I want you to think back carefully; this is very important. When you came into the room, were the nurses—either or both of them doing anything for Mr. Brent? I mean, definitely, did either of them have a hypodermic syringe in her hand? Think back. . . ."

"My heart came up in my throat. I didn't dare look at Drue. Then Peter said, positively, 'No.' 'Are you sure?'"

"Absolutely. They were just standing there. We looked at him but he was dead. So Miss Keate sent Miss Cable back upstairs to Craig, and me to telephone. I didn't succeed in getting the doctor then. I couldn't find the number; I was upset. Anyway, all at once there was this sound of something falling. . . ."

"Yes, yes, you told us about that," said the District Attorney testily. "Something falling and the sound of a window breaking and we can't find anything that fell and there is no window broken." He turned to me. "Miss Keate, was there anything else? Anything that happened last night before the death of Mr. Brent that struck you as being—well, out of the way? Unusual."

From the way he said it, I had a quick impression that he had asked everyone that. Maud looked rather scornful, and Alexia all but yawned. It was one of fate's dangerous little jokes that I would have answered in the negative (as I imagine everyone else had done) had not Delphine at that point slunk across the hall, with a wary green eye toward the trooper in the doorway.

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.
The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.
When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning some-

These Youths—
Nursed on Hate
HAVE BECOME
COLD-BLOODED MURDERERS!

Will Your Child Suffer from their "Education"?

THESE were gentle, innocent, lovable youngsters when Hitler seized power. Now they belong to the Waffen SS— the "heavy weapons" police.

Soldiers of the German Army might hesitate to shoot down a populace driven desperate by tyrannical masters. But these brutal, fanatical, 17-year-olds will machine-gun their own mothers if Hitler commands.

Their training began ten years ago. They were spoon-fed on hate. Child-like, this "master race" first showed its heroism by starting book-bonfires and scratching "Jew" on shopkeepers' windows.

When Der Fuehrer applauded, the children robbed Jews and spit upon Catholics. But that was merely "good clean fun."
Later, their Leader gave them torches. They burned down places of worship. He gave them guns, and spoke hoarsely of their German world inheritance. It doesn't take long to teach children to murder.

Hate was not taught to German children, alone. Hate, made in Germany, has been exported to America—in broadcasts, pamphlets, whispers. Our own children have come under its influence . . . "Charlie is a dirty Catholic!" . . . Jimmy is a dirty Jew!" . . . "George is a dirty Nigger!" . . . "Tom is a dirty foreigner!" . . . "Dickie goes to a different kind of church!"

With childish unreason, youngsters absorb parental attitudes.
Obviously, some grown-ups in this country have listened to Hitler's "hymn of hate" . . . and their children are singing the chorus.

Hitler has schemed to turn us against each other—to make Protestants, Catholics and Jews, Negroes and Whites hate each other. He has planned to destroy us by letting us destroy ourselves!

But Freedom and Prejudice cannot live side by side!

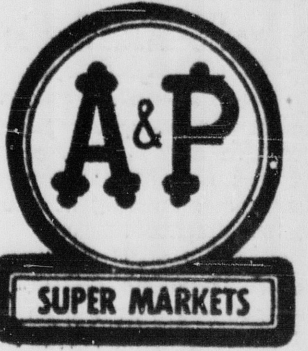

Teach your children that. Teach them that all must share equally our gift of Freedom. None must be denied it! None must be ridiculed or abused! Teach them that they must be Americans—good Americans! Teach them by being one yourself!

Be American!

IT WASN'T A DREAM

Now that the Heimies are again on the run on the Western Front—as well as elsewhere—there is a disposition to minimize the potentialities of the Von Rundstedt offensive, which, a month ago, many feared would take all before it. Some persons now regard it as having been just a flash in the pan that never was a threat to Allied progress.

It should be remembered, though, that most military observers were certain last month that this offensive had as its purpose the winning of time so that Hitler could raise 100 new divisions for use in the spring. Because the Germans are again being pushed back does not prove that he has not gained the time needed, if that was his object.

The picture of the German offensive, as viewed from this point, resembles the following:

The Nazi armies were within 500 yards of millions of gallons of American gasoline. Only two and one-half miles away was the sprawling American 1st Army headquarters, with vast supply dumps. Had the Germans gone those 500 yards, they could have crashed on and perhaps driven through to Paris and Antwerp. What stopped them? They ran out of gasoline—500 yards from millions of gallons of it.

Von Rundstedt tried exactly the same thing that worked for the Nazis in 1940. Then, they drove through the Allied lines, split the French and British forces, and then came Dunkerque.

Simplest and most direct analysis of the whole episode has come from Brig. Gen. Leonard P. Ayres, one of the most astute American observers of the world scene. Calling the German attack a successful surprise, he said there seem to be two principal reasons why such a surprise was possible.

"The first," he said, "is that our high command misinterpreted the information which they had that the Germans were concentrating divisions behind their lines opposite the Ardennes Forest through which our front lines ran. The concentration was assumed to be a defensive grouping, which it was not. The second reason why a surprise was possible was that our generals apparently far underestimated the military skill and resourcefulness of their adversaries."

General MacArthur's activities in the Philippines are an act of desperation, says General Homma, who forgot to add that the Japs are on the desperate side.

If the farmer is expected to produce still more food with still less help, any hankering he may have had to join the CIO is out.

End of the world is set for Monday, March 12, by a California "seer." That gives everybody Sunday to rest up for the ordeal.

Announcement that shoe stamps would not be cancelled stimulated the business of the shoe stores considerably.

PROTECT BABY'S SKIN FROM INTENSE COLD OF THE WINTER

By Mary Jacoby Fleetman

(Home Economics Representative)
Baby needs special beauty care when winter winds blow. Jack Frost seems to take joy in nipping at his fingers and cheeks and round button nose. But it's easy to protect his sensitive chin from chapping if, before you take him out of doors, you rub his hands and cheeks with a special baby lotion that's made of pure lanolin with an antiseptic agent for added extra protection. Make it routine to give toddlers and kindergartners as well as baby all-over rub-downs with this new baby lotion after baths to keep skin satin smooth in spite of steam heat and cold weather. And use baby lotion after diaper changes, too, to help his majesty avoid uncomfortable chafes.

With this they took care of a ward of 45 boys. They also sent boxes to three Croydon boys in hospitals throughout the United States.

resources of the American people. The size of the debt will automatically freeze all forms of credit in this nation the moment the national government wishes.

One form or another of credit is indispensable for all forms of business in a free economy.

If the Federal government, as is now apparent is the intention, sets up a monopoly of credit under Henry Wallace, then Wallace becomes the czar of all forms of American business.

Saying that this is being contemplated in the names of "democracy" and "free enterprise" doesn't alter facts. The program is the antithesis of democracy, the denial of free enterprise.

The fact that the Spanish inquisition was set up in the name of Christianity did not make it one bit less bloodthirsty, tyrannical and subversive of human rights and freedoms.

The measures now being urged in the halls of Congress with all the eloquence and political pressure and prestige of the White House behind them, under whatever innocent title they may be known, still are flagrant, outrageous and Communist-designed dictatorship.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Unqualified

Washington, Jan. 25.

UNDER ANY ordinary circumstances the door would be closed to Mr. Henry Wallace at the head of the department which deals exclusively with business and controls an almost incredible number of billions.

BUT, AFTER twelve years of outstandingly fine performance, to have Mr. Jones thrown out to make room for Mr. Henry Wallace because of pressure from the CIO bosses and in order to appease the screaming New York radicals ought to cause regret to be mixed with widespread indignation. That such has been the general reaction is attested in various ways. The truth is that this incident reveals Mr. Roosevelt in a particularly unpleasant light. He has made no appointment more wholly political; none in which there has been so little consideration of merit; none in which the qualifications of the man have been so wholly ignored.

IT IS significant that in his letter asking Mr. Jones to resign "for Henry," the President, with almost no pretense of admitting that he was the request in order to reward Mr. Wallace for his support in the recent campaign and because he had "asked for it." He does not mention the CIO and its radical allies, but he did not need to, as, except for those two groups, Mr. Wallace has no personal following and no political strength and there exists no excuse for his "recognition." These arguments, along with Mr. Wallace himself, have been "naming" for many weeks. They have made the Wallace appointment the test. Their journalistic and political spokesmen made it clear that unless Mr. Wallace was "taken care of" by his left-wing friends would regard it as a "betrayal of the liberal cause" by Mr. Roosevelt whom they had so ardently and noisily supported. This, of course, is nonsense but it was, nevertheless, trumpeted almost daily.

AND Mr. Roosevelt yielded to the "demor and the threats." He said in a letter to Mr. Jones that "this is a difficult letter to write." It is easy to understand that. He had to explain to a faithful official and a loyal friend that he was displacing him for a man immeasurably less well qualified and for political reasons only. Neither Mr. Jones nor a very large number of the American people regard his explanation as adequate. The fact is no one save the President and Mr. Wallace's "political friends" who so regard it. To offer Mr. Jones a diplomatic post was trivial and Mr. Jones properly rejected it. It is refreshing, too, that Mr. Jones did not take the President's action with the unbecoming meekness with which various others whom Mr. Roosevelt has "pitched" for political reasons, while professing personal friendship, have taken it.

SO FAR as the business interests of the country are concerned, the appointment is certainly a shock. Mr. Wallace, of course, is an honest man but he is entirely devoid of any sort of business experience and any talent for administration. In addition, his CIO and radical friends are bitterly hostile to industry, and tend, as he does, toward greater, not less, governmental control over business. When one considers that the RFC alone has commitments of more than 50 billion dollars and that it is a revolving fund over which Congress has no control, the tremendous power which the President proposes to place in Mr. Wallace's utterly inexperienced hands can be grasped. In his whole career Mr. Wallace has had almost no experience in private business except that involved in his brief editorship of the farm journal inherited from his father and which lost its identity before Mr. Roosevelt became President. Yet, it is now planned to oust one of the most capable business men in the country and put Mr. Wallace at the head of the department which deals exclusively with business and controls an almost incredible number of billions.

OPPOSITION to his confirmation in the Senate is based, partly, on his total unfitness for such huge financial responsibilities; partly on the undisputed use of this important post as a political reward; partly, on Mr. Wallace's own radical views as expressed in his writings and speeches. But, mainly, the appointment is opposed because of the belief that with him as Secretary of Commerce, the CIO will be definitely in the governmental saddle with its professional lobbyists as the closest advisers to the man controlling the multibillions of the RFC and allied agencies. There is a feeling that the Wallace appointment will present an opportunity for the CIO to dominate and operate the business of the country in a way heretofore undreamed, and that, despite his friendly words about "private enterprise," Mr. Wallace's whole heart would be set in this direction.

SOME SENATORS believe that his appointment threatens the whole economic security of the country and regard the effort to give him this gigantic power fully as dangerous in a way heretofore undreamed, and that, despite his friendly words about "private enterprise," Mr. Wallace's whole heart would be set in this direction.

Faith Clarke's SHOPPING TIPS FOR BUDGETEERS

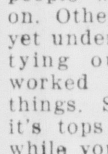

HOME DRESSMAKERS are flocking to the Snellenburg Yard Goods Dept. Many lovely materials, but at $1.19 a yard there is 40 in. spun rayon that's fine for dresses and little two-piece sport or dressmaker suits. Unrashable. You'll like it. White, Kelly green, navy, black, red (2nd fl.)

NURSES OR MAIDS will look smart and feel comfy in the nicely made white uniforms to be had in the Snellenburg Uniform Dept. Firm white poplins, short and long sleeves, differing necklines, set-in belts or princess styles, sizes 12 to 52, priced at $2.95, $4.95, $5.95. Shirts $4.95 and $5.95. (2nd fl.)

A REVIVAL of the Oulia boards offers exciting pastime. The darned things really do move and spell-out messages. Some think those messages are from people who've actually passed on. Others believe it is a force not yet understood by science for emptying our sub-conscious. I've worked one of these amazing things. So can you. In any event it's tops entertainment. Get one while you can—$1.95, in the Toy Dept. of the Snellenburg Store. (4th fl.)

BOOK WORMS — of which tribe I am a very fat one—will delight in the number of hand-made and reasonably priced reprints that the Snellenburg Book Dept. is proud of displaying at all times. Not only are there quite recent "best sellers" in fiction, but there are many splendid non-fiction books. Now 79c to $1.49, values were up to $5 for originals. A new venture of this fine Book Dept. is the display of "Best Books" booklets at but 15c each. Very modern, they are expensive and brilliant illustrations. I gathered up eight look forward to collecting more. Order them by the half dozen, by phone or mail, and they'll be sent to you. Dozens of titles. Some are "So You're Expecting (A Bundle from Heaven)," "How to Be Beautiful," "2000 Blue-Whites (All in one volume)," "Hand Knits for Service Men," "Cookie Book," "War-time Entertaining," "Tricks You Can Do Without Practice," "World's Cleverest Wiscracks," "How to Decorate Your Living Room (Another for Dining Rooms)," "Quick Way to Better Grammar," etc. Really grand. (1st floor.)

DOGS ARE PEOPLE to those of us who love them, and what normal human being doesn't? Dogs need identification tags as much as soldiers do identification bracelets. Someday, too, I'm going to start a campaign for identification bracelets for all children—with addresses. That good Dog Counter in the Snellenburg Pet Dept., will, for $1, furnish a metal disk tag with your dog's name, address, and telephone number. When is your dog's birthday? Hang one of those life-saving disks upon his collar. You owe it to him. And perhaps you'd like to buy him a bed—he gets rheumatism from floor drafts. Snellenburgs have some grand dog-beds. (Sporting Goods Dept., 3rd fl.)

P.S. Shop at this friendly store—Market from 11th to 12th, thru to 1125-29 Chestnut St., Phila. Or order by mail. Or phone free (5c, 10c and 15c out-of-town calls only). Clippings appreciated. Penna. number, ENTERPRISE 10160; New Jersey, WX-1150. Cheerio! Faithfully, FAITH.

Remove to hot platter and garnish with watercress and slices of lemon. Serve once.

When hot, put in the roe and cook slowly until brown on one side. Turn and brown on the other side. A cover may be put over the frying pan to keep the shortening from spattering. These Youths...
Nursed on Hate

HAVE BECOME
COLD-BLOODED MURDERERS!

Will Your Child Suffer from their "Education"?

THESE were gentle, innocent, lovable youngsters when Hitler seized power. Now they belong to the Waffen SS—the "heavy weapons" police.

Soldiers of the German Army might hesitate to shoot down a populace driven desperate by tyrannical masters. But these brutal, fanatical, 17-year-olds will machine-gun their own mothers if Hitler commands.

Their training began ten years ago. They were spoon-fed on hate. Child-like, this "master race" first showed its heroism by starting book-bonfires and scratching "Jew" on shopkeepers' windows.

When Der Fuehrer applauded, the children robbed Jews and spit upon Catholics. But that was merely "good clean fun." Later, their Leader gave them torches. They burned down places of worship. He gave them guns, and spoke hoarsely of their German world inheritance. It doesn't take long to teach children to murder.

Hate was not taught to German children, alone. Hate, made in Germany, has been exported to America—in broadcasts, pamphlets, whispers. Our own children have come under its influence... "Charlie is a dirty Catholic!"... "Jimmy is a dirty Jew!"... "George is a dirty Nigger!"... "Tom is a dirty foreigner!"... "Dickie goes to a different kind of church!"

With childish unreason, youngsters absorb parental attitudes. Obviously, some grown-ups in this country have listened to Hitler's "hymn of hate"... and their children are singing the chorus.

Hitler has schemed to turn us against each other—to make Protestants, Catholics and Jews, Negroes and Whites hate each other. He has planned to destroy us by letting us destroy ourselves!

But Freedom and Prejudice cannot live side by side!

Teach your children that. Teach them that all must share equally our gift of Freedom. None must be denied it! None must be ridiculed or abused! Teach them that they must be Americans—good Americans! Teach them by being one yourself!

Be American!

companied a rapidly falling temperature and snow squalls. With express rapidity the mercury ran downward, starting at one o'clock in the afternoon.

At one o'clock the mercury was at the freezing mark, 32, then dropped one degree each hour until four o'clock, dropped to 26 by five, to 20 by six o'clock, then on down from one to three degrees an hour. At seven this morning it stood at zero and remained there at eight, according to readings at the Rohm & Haas Co. weather observatory.

Unofficial readings throughout Bucks County placed the mercury at zero around seven o'clock also, with some sections reporting a few degrees below. At seven this morning at the PIR station in Bristol, also at Andalusia, Croydon and Bath Road sections the temperature was zero. Reports from Eddington places it unofficially at four below at eight o'clock.

Twenty-five Doylestown residents sat shivering in a Reading Railroad Co. three-coach train from 10:15 last night until two o'clock this morning, half-way between Colmar and Chalfont, Bucks County.

The electric train, due at Doylestown at 10:32 last night, was stalled when the high winds blew down the wires at 10:15. The Reading Co. immediately dispatched a bus from Lansdale and one from Doylestown to rescue the stranded passengers. The buses had to leave the main highway and go through a side road in order to reach the stalled train, and both buses became stalled in snow drifts and were unable to reach the passengers. Therefore the passengers had to remain in the train several hours, reaching Doylestown at 2:30 this morning.

The Reading train scheduled to leave Doylestown at 11:36 last night for Philadelphia did not leave until three a. m. The stalled train had to be pushed into Doylestown this morning by a steam engine procured from Lansdale.

During the blinding snowstorm driven by high winds last evening at five o'clock two trucks crashed on the Bethlehem Pike a quarter of a mile south of Sellersville. An oil truck and trailer driven by Herbert Chandler, of Lancaster, and a truck operated by William Streator, of Perkasie, were involved.

The Streator truck stalled on a hill and Chandler attempted to drive around the stalled machine. His trailer struck the stalled truck and ripped a hole in it, spilling 3,300 gallons of fuel oil over the highway. The Streator truck, loaded with oyster shells, spilled its contents into the oil. All traffic had to be blocked over one lane of the highway for the balance of the night.

Almighty God, go before us in all the way of life for the way is difficult and steep. Our poor frail strength is not sufficient for the way of life but we know we can do all things through Christ who strengthens us. Dear Jesus, the Brother of man, the Saviour of the world, come to us and give us to know that in Thee we have a Friend who is closer to us than any relative or friend. Thou hast proven Thy love and the symbol of that love is the beloved Cross of Christ. In that Cross may we, this day, glory in the everlasting glory of God. We pray in Jesus' Name. Amen.

Supervising Principal J. Leonard Haldeman, of Doylestown schools, has received a postal card from Lt. William S. Northington, Army Air Corps, a prisoner of war in Germany.

Lt. Northington, a graduate of Doylestown High School, is the son of Mrs. Ethel Northington. In his postal, which was dated September 18, 1944, Lt. Northington wrote that he had been a prisoner of war for about three months and that he was not doing much except awaiting the end of the war. He also wrote that it had been a long time since he had had any news from home.

Following the installation of the recently elected officers of Chalfont Grange on Monday evening, Mrs. Charles Stover briefly discussed the question, "What should constitute the social activities of the farmer's wife?" In this connection Mrs. Stover pointed out that one of the first objectives of the women on the farm should be giving assistance in winning the war.

Farm women, said Mrs. Stover, should take part in activities that are uplifting. She suggested work in the church, Grange and parent-teacher association. She said women can aid in winning the war by helping the Red Cross and similar organizations.

Due to the shortage of gasoline and tires, said Mrs. Stover, women should not use the automobile more than is necessary. During normal times, she said, the farm women can resume their bridge club and other social activities.

Mr. Martin was not in sympathy with the Democratic proposal to have jurats witnessed by non-commissioned officers, asserting that in the event of fraud, it might tend to lower morale.

The agreement on the soldier vote plans, he added, "paves the way for further bi-partisan agreements on legislation." He asserted he was "most appreciative of the fine spirit in which both parties entered the conferences."

Bucks Co. Men Build Highways In Italy

Army offensive jumped off on May 11th.

Closely supporting the infantrymen as they battled their way through Santa Maria Infante, over the mountains, past Itri, Fondi, Cori and into Rome, the 313th cleared mines, repaired demolitions and built bridges, airstrips and roads. To aid the doughboys in flanking the Formia corridor, the 313th built a two mile trail over virgin ground and steep hills in nine short hours aiding two American divisions to move towards Maranola and Itri.

Four more times in the lightning drive to Rome, the 313th cleared supply routes out of stubborn Italian terrain to keep rations and ammunition moving to the hard-driving 88th. Mount Ruazzo, the peaks above Fondi to Sonnino, the area south of Rome and Roccamare, and miles from Cori to Cichetti, saw roads appear under the tools and sweat of the 313th.

After Rome, the engineers neutralized minefields, underwent heavy enemy shelling and kept vital supply lanes open in clouds of choking dust as the "Blue Devil" wrote the names of Pomerance, Montecatini, San Minato and the Arno River into their battle records.

In the Fifth Army's drive through the Gothic Line, a mule path from Collinada to a point across the Santoro River hadn't worried the Germans much—they thought no large scale force could be supplied over such a rugged trail. But the 313th, in bad weather and under heavy enemy fire, blasted and dug the Fronda Trail, making it negotiable.

Late in September, the rain-swollen Santoro River washed out the sole road link to the 88th on Mount Battaglia and near Castel del Rio and two companies of the 313th, in high wind and rain and under enemy shell-fire, strung a line across the gorge and sent vitally needed food, medical supplies and ammunition to the stranded fighters. The next day the engineers put an assault boat ferry into operation, making possible delivery of a larger volume of supplies and evacuation of seriously wounded infantrymen.

The 313th came overseas in December, 1943, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Salvatore A. Armogida of Canton, Ohio. Its present commander is Major James H. Green of Pensacola, Florida.

The men of the 313th have won two Legions of Merit, seven Silver Stars, 28 Bronze Stars, three Soldier's Medals and three division commendations. The battalion also was honored by the city of Muskogee, Oklahoma, for distinguished work during the Arkansas River floods of May, 1943.

RACING BAN IS "OLD STUFF" IN NEW YORK CITY

Liability Law Almost Closed
The Tracks in 1911, It
Is Recalled

A SOCIAL REVOLUTION

Gov. Charles Evans Hughes
Signed the Perkins-Agnew
Anti-Betting Law

By John Cashman

(I. N. S. Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—(INS)—New York was hit hardest by the recently-enforced ban on horse racing, but it is not the first time the Empire State has seen shuttered betting windows and ill attended tracks.

Back in 1911 and 1912, the game was blacked out by a thing called the Director's Liability Law and horsemen had to fight their case clear up to the Appellate Division in the New York State Supreme Court before they could once more get going.

The country must have been a trifle humorless back in those days, because the forces of social reform closed down the tracks and seven years later forbade the citizens to indulge in vino. The havoc wrought at tracks in New York was comparable to that caused by Prohibition and reaction against both was bitter and, in the case of racing, faster.

There seemed to be some doubts as to the integrity of horse players in those days and on June 15, 1910, Gov. Charles Evans Hughes of New York signed the Perkins-Agnew anti-betting law. There was a little civil commotion in the legislative chambers of Albany over this bill, and a platoon of the righteous, in order to cinch the passing of the bill, dragged from his sick bed one Senator Foelker and practically carried the old fellow into the chambers on their backs.

Senator Foelker quaveringly cast his vote for the bill, then went back to bed and spent the next couple of weeks reading letters from outraged horse-fanciers who swore they would dispatch him to the Senatorial Valhalla if given the opportunity.

This bit of drama capped a long march by the army of the just to kill racing in New York. In 1908, the Agnew-Hart Act forbade betting on thoroughbreds and the directors of the tracks were able to run their plants only as long as the Percy-Gray law was in operation. This was put through in 1907 and at the State into racing swag to be tune of five per cent. Hughes' adhering of the Perkins-Agnew and Directors Liability laws was he blow that killed daddy, however, and policemen were hustled off to the tracks every day.

In the fall of 1912, the United Hunt meeting was going on rather shakily at Belmont. In the course of one of the programs, a chap named Paul Shane was arrested for taking an oral bet in the professional manner, that is, quoting the odds to the bettor and marking down the wager on a slip of paper.

Shane did not appear reluctant to go to jail; as a matter of fact, he was inordinately cheerful for a man who is going to be clapped into the cooler. He was, actually, the "fall guy" for the racing interests. The directors wanted to throw the racing question into the courts, and this was their way of doing it.

It meant a great deal to the racing people, since the game had gone into a decline. Owners were shipping horses away from New York and often out of the country. The crowds were slimming down. Business, in short, was falling off and it looked as if racing were a dead duck. But the good old Appellate Division bobbed up with the ruling that oral betting was not bookmaking, nor was it a violation of the law. The reformers grumbled that the racing interests had tampered with justice and the horsemen replied that they had not transported the judges into court on their backs. It was as good a comeback as any.

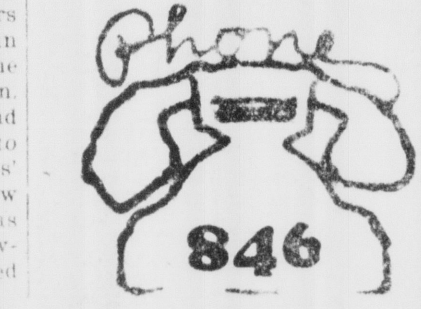

Racing in New York was put back on its feet through a subsidy for tracks and stakes offered by twelve of the top-ranking horsemen. From its pitiable state in 1913, racing reached its present heights. In other words, racing started badly in 1913 and wound up with no racing at all, but at least the New York horsemen can say that this has happened before and can look forward to the time when racing is resumed.
